Dear Delegates,

We are more than happy to meet you. It is an enormous pleasure to greet you and welcome you to the committee of the World Trade Organization. We are very honored to be your chair for this edition of SIMUN. Allow us to introduce ourselves; our names are Sara Elena González de la Vega, Claudia Moguel Pinto and Mía Barrero Quirarte, and SIMUN has been such a fantastic experience for us, so we hope that you have a great time as well.

We believe that the topics that will be discussed are of very high relevance and, although they will be regarded from an international commerce point of view, they come from a very social sentiment. During the debate, we are looking for sharp and enthusiastic delegates who are looking forward to sharing your ideas and listening to others, promoting real solutions to real problems, and making an actual change about current issues which have a huge impact on our daily lives, either we notice it or not.

In SIMUN, you will use your confidence, your debating skills, your convincing arguments and strong ideas. We believe this experience is an excellent tool for building strong and confident delegates that will prosper and mold tomorrow's world. We are thrilled to meet all of the great minds with innovative and creative ideas that will accompany us through this journey! We hope that participating at this committee will make a positive impact on you and make you reflect on the current global situation. We want to remind you to enjoy and cherish every aspect of this exercise.

Do not be afraid to share and defend your opinions, while remaining open minded, considering that the upcoming ideas will be the solutions for the present and future conflicts. Let your mind be your strongest weapon, always keep it loaded. And let your choices be a reflection of those bright thoughts of yours.

Sincerely,

The Academic Chair of the World Trade Organization
